

A few decades ago Simon and Garfunkle said we've all gone to look for America.

I believe that yesterday my wife and I found it.

Judy and I drove to the Fingerlakes region. We drove to Geneva – and then drove all the way around Seneca Lake.

We stopped for breakfast in Geneva – on Main Street. We found strangers that we had never met. And left there feeling like we'd known them for a long time.

We met a waitress at the Water Street Café – a small restaurant owned by her Mother . They worked together to help run the family business, even though she had already gotten her college degree in Retailing and Design.

We saw everyday folks like you and me meet in a place the seemed accustomed to, a place that must have been like their second kitchen, or even a second home, filled with friends.

We had a wonderful breakfast on Main St. in Geneva. We had a wonderful breakfast on Main St. in America.

All day long we found Strangers that we had never met, and left there feeling like we'd known them for a long time.

A few decades ago Simon and Garfunkle said we've all gone to look for America.

I believe that yesterday my wife and I found it.